Eri loves dogs. When Eri was in the third grade of elementary school, she found a little dog abandoned near her house. It was dirty and wet. The brown dog looked straight at Eri for help. It had a broken leg.

Eri took the dog home. She cleaned it and took care of it. She asked her parents, “May I keep this dog?” At first, their answer was “No”, but because she asked again and again, they finally said to her, “You may keep the dog, but you must take good care of it.”

The dog was a boy. Eri named the dog Cookie. Cookie and Eri became good friends soon. Cookie became a new member of the family.

When Eri graduated from elementary school, her father transferred to Tokyo, and her family had to move there, too. However, in the new apartment, they couldn't keep any pets. So her father decided to give Cookie to his old friend, Mr. Suzuki. Mr. Suzuki liked Cookie very much, but Eri was sad. Cookie was already an important member of the family, but there was nothing she could do. Eri cried when she said goodbye to Cookie.

Three years later, Eri graduated from junior high school. She and her parents visited their hometown to meet Mr. Suzuki again. Eri was very happy. She was looking forward to seeing Cookie again. However, she was a little worried, too. She thought, “Will Cookie remember me after such a long time?”

Now the time finally came. Eri knocked on the door of Mr. Suzuki's house, and slowly opened it. Cookie was sitting in the living room. When he noticed that Eri was at the door, he ran and jumped into her arms. “You remember me!” Eri said. Eri held him for a long time. Her eyes were full of tears. Eri was happy to see Cookie again, but she also thanked Mr. Suzuki for taking good care of Cookie.

At school in Tokyo, Eri learned that in Japan, more than 70 thousand cats and dogs are abandoned. She also learned that more than 20 thousand of them are killed each year. Eri remembered Cookie was dirty and had a broken leg when she first met him. “Why was his leg broken? Why was he abandoned?” she wondered. She found that there are several groups in Japan that work hard to help abandoned cats and dogs, and find their new owners. Now Eri wants to work for such a group in the future.
